

Marriages may end, families don't. . .

Children Cope with Divorce is a 4-hour seminar about the needs of children during and after the separation or divorce of their parents.

The seminar is conducted by licensed professionals with expertise in the areas of divorce and co-parenting.

The effects of divorce on children can be negative and potentially long term. Children must master an additional set of tasks, along with those posed by normal childhood development. This seminar educates parents about how to help their children adjust and handle these additional tasks.

Topics addressed during the seminar include: typical reactions of children, how childhood developmental stages affect children's ability to cope, co-parenting issues, and pitfalls to avoid.

Children Cope with Divorce benefits families by:

- Decreasing future litigation, court costs and time.
- Reducing the risk of adolescent drug and alcohol abuse, teen pregnancy, school dropout, and other adjustment problems.
- Increasing the likelihood of positive future relationships for parents and children.

A Child's Bill of Rights in a Divorce

1. To be told that my mother and father still love me and will never divorce me.
2. To be told that the divorce is not my fault and not be told about the adult problems that caused it.
3. To be considered as a human being and not considered as another piece of property to be fought for, bargained over, or threatened.
4. To have decisions about me based on what is in my best interests not on past wrongs, hurt feelings, or my parent's needs.
5. To be allowed to love both my father and my mother without being forced to choose or feel guilty.
6. To know both my father and mother through their regular and frequent involvement in my life.*
7. To have the financial support of both my father and my mother.
8. To be spared hearing bad, hurtful comments about either of my parents which have no useful purpose in my healthy development.
9. To be a child who is not asked to tell a lie or act as a spy or messenger.
10. To be allowed to have affection for the people who may come into my life without being forced to choose or feel guilty.

Safety and best interest of the child is paramount in cases of abuse, neglect, abandonment or other extreme situations which are out of the ordinary.*
